Darnley Stewart is a plaintiff's employment and civil rights lawyer. She graduated from Princeton University in 1984 and received her law degree from Northeastern University School of Law in 1990. Prior to entering private practice, she served as Law Clerk to the Honorable R. Ammi Cutter and the Honorable Mel. L. Greenberg of the Massachusetts Court of Appeals. Ms. Stewart's practice focuses on discrimination class actions and she has prosecuted high impact cases against a number of large companies, including Ford Motor Company, Gerber, Coastal Corporation, First Union Bank, National Car Rental, General Motors, Nissan, Toyota, and Bank of America. She is currently serving as co-lead counsel in a gender class action entitled Bell, et al. v. Lockheed Martin Corporation, pending in the District of New Jersey. In connection with her work on Coleman, et al. v. General Motors Acceptance Corporation, Ms. Stewart was named as a finalist for "Trial Lawyer of the Year" in 2004 by the Trial Lawyers for Public Justice. She has also been named as one of the leading 500 plaintiffs' lawyers in the country and one of America's top 1000 litigators by Lawdragon magazine. In addition, Ms. Stewart was selected for inclusion in the list of 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009 and 2010 New York Super Lawyers and one of the New York Area's Best Lawyers for 2011 by New York Magazine.

Ms. Stewart is the President of the Executive Board of the New York affiliate of National Employment Lawyers Association (NELA/NY). She is also a member of the Class and Collective Action Committee of NELA National, and the Technology in the Law and Workplace Committee of the American Bar Association's Labor and Employment Section. Ms. Stewart lectures regularly on employment class action issues, and has frequently commented in the media, including the Wall Street Journal, the New York Times, National Public Radio and the Today show, regarding issues raised in a variety of employment discrimination cases. She also sits on the Advisory Boards of the Bronx Academy of Letters, Workplace Fairness, and NYU's Center for Labor and Employment Law.

Amanda Masters has practiced civil rights law for thirteen years in both private firm and non-profit settings. Her practice focuses on civil rights litigation including housing discrimination based on race, disability, sexual orientation, or source of income; impact litigation seeking to protect and advance fair housing rights; the rights of people with disabilities, including access to places of public accommodation, housing, employment, architectural barriers and physical accessibility issues, program accessibility, reasonable accommodations, and other areas of disability rights law; and police use of excessive force and other official misconduct. She has litigated a number of complex civil rights cases on behalf of individuals and groups, including high impact civil rights cases against the New York State Department of Health, the New York State Office of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities, and the New York City Police Department. Ms. Masters was the 2010 recipient of the “Outstanding Fair Housing Attorney” Acting For Justice Award by the Fair Housing Justice Center.

Ms. Masters worked for eight years at New York Lawyers for the Public Interest (NYLPI), a non-profit civil rights firm where she served as both the Director of the Access to Health Care program (a racial justice practice) and the Director of the Opportunity & Access program (a disability rights practice). She supervised attorneys and other staff engaged in a range of activities including impact litigation, administrative advocacy, direct representation, lobbying, community organizing, and outreach. She also served as co-counsel on the Willowbrook class action, enforcing the permanent injunction in that case brought on behalf of 5,000 developmentally disabled and formerly institutionalized New Yorkers to ensure their right to live in the community and receive high quality services

Prior to NYLPI, Amanda was an associate at a firm focused on police misconduct and other civil rights issues, and a staff attorney at a legal services organization focused on immigrants' rights. She also served as Program Director for the Center for New York City Neighborhoods, a non-profit organization providing funding to free legal services providers and housing counseling organizations in New York City. She has served as the Treasurer of the National Police Accountability Project (NPAP), she is the Executive Vice-President of Sisterhood Mobilized for AIDS/HIV Research and Treatment (SMART), and she is the founder of the New York City Policing Roundtable (NYCPR) and serves on its Advisory Board. Ms. Masters has taught numerous Continuing Legal Education courses on the topics of police misconduct law, the rights of people with disabilities, and community organizing.
